ON FIRST TAKING OFFICE

For a considerable time the satisfaction of being a member of a community one has only recently joined is all that one needs from belonging to it, but the time comes when one is prepared to consider taking a less passive part in whatever forms the activity of the undertaking.

A great part of Freemasonry consists of ritual observance, and this is not simply formalism but reliance upon allegory and illustration, making use of the best means of inculcating lessons so that they will not easily be forgotten.

The working of a degree in a Masonic lodge is like the staging of a play: it is a dramatic performance in which each participant has his allotted work, in which timing is important, and sometimes lighting, in which there is an element of surprise and in which one plays before the critical eyes of one's friends. The performances are carefully rehearsed, and there is a certain elation which comes very early during the evening of a successful working: one quickly identifies the occasions on which the whole team is in form, and working as a trained and competent caste to drive firmly home the lesson of the performance. To the candidate on such an occasion, the gift of the lodge is an experience which it would be difficult ever to forget.

In a sense every man present takes part in the rite, just as in an act of worship a congregation will join the priest or holy man who leads it. But some must be chosen to help the principal actor, and on the effectiveness of their discharge of their duties will depend the judgment of those who will have to choose from among the actors those most worthy of still further preferment.

Most Masonic rituals preface nearly every speech or charge with the direction "W.M.", indicating that the Worshipful Master is the speaker: in some constitutions, indeed, the work is in fact confined almost entirely to the Master, or to the Master with a little help from one or two Past Masters: the lodge is opened and closed by the full team of officers, but the degree is worked entirely from the East. More familiarly in New Zealand the letters "W.M." in the ritual are taken to suggest that this is Master's work which the Master may delegate, and much of it is in fact entrusted to Brethren who are not Past Masters, not even Officers of the lodge.

This we conceive to be a healthy and useful practice, and most elderly Freemasons have watched the progress of more than one shy young man through initial hesitation and stumbling to confident and capable delivery of the magnificent words of the ritual. The ritual can take a great deal of inexpert bashing and manhandling without losing the whole of its force and impact. but when it is dealt with by a Brother who appreciates its beauty and its meaning, one who has equipped himself by perseverance to play his part creditably and sympathetically, it seems to become invested with added power and meaning. What in fact is happening is that the Brother who is presenting the words is doing so in such a way as to make us all grasp not only their meaning but their beauty. Different men accord emphasis to different parts of the ritual—even after many years it is possible to learn something new from each successive working.

Before being formally invited to accept office, or to accept nomination for office, it is probable that the new Brother will have been asked to undertake some small part of the work: or he may have been asked to accompany the Stewards to the refectory. In either case he has been asked to act as one of the team: he has gone one step forward from his simple membership: he has been assigned a particular duty.

Whatever sign of confidence has been made to him, whatever small piece of practice has been entrusted to him, it will be a prelude to his first office.

In New Zealand we are not bound by "the line", as lodges and particularly grand lodges sometimes are abroad, but it is a fact that once a Brother's name figures on the list of officers there is every chance, if he stands regularly and does his work with conviction, that he will proceed through the offices until in time he is installed into the Chair of K.S. There is nothing automatic about it, in every lodge elections or selections are made every year. Sometimes a Brother will fall out of line to become Chaplain, Treasurer, Secretary or Almoner and stay some years in that office. sometimes he will never return to the line. More often his progress will not be interrupted, and the "side" offices will be filled by Brethren who have already been through the Chair or have no aspiration to it.

In these circumstances there rests a great responsibility—on the Master, in prerogative lodges, on the Standing Committee and the full membership of the lodge in lodges which elect their officers to make sure that every nominee from the bottom up has the potential which will enable him in due course with truth and a clear conscience to claim to be able and willing to undertake the management of the work: a worthy Freemason capable of becoming a worthy Master.

It is much easier not to select an unsuitable man at all than to select him, wait until he has served several offices to the best of his ability, and then find that in all conscience he cannot be preferred any further. This happens very seldom, and when it does, unless the Brother has suffered a character deterioration, it is the fault and the responsibility of the lodge: and in consequence it will have to disappoint a Brother by denying him not what is his by right, but what is almost within his grasp and likely to become his unless there is some very unusual circumstance, such as something wrong with himself. It is not a joyful experience to be dropped from the line, and it can strain the loyalty of the unfortunate Brother.

What he is given or denied is of course the highest gift the lodge can confer upon him: a new collar and jewel, the style of Worshipful, authority to rule and direct his lodge. If he can see no further he is not a fit and proper person to occupy the Master's Chair. It is the opportunity for service which is important. Most Masters see this very clearly: the development sometimes of a perfectly ordinary and undistinguished Freemason into a notable and outstanding servant of the Craft and much more effective citizen can often be seen to begin at the point when he is installed as Master: this is the point at which his real attitude towards the Craft most often stands revealed.

It is a great tribute not only to the selection techniques and the safeguards the Craft provides against hasty or unworthy admissions that so many men stand up to this test. We have many lodges, and very few of them ever seem to have bad or unworthy Masters. Some Masters, certainly, a year or so after going through the Chair, begin to drop away: sometimes their interest has not really been caught; sometimes their imagination is not equal to repetition without experiencing boredom; sometimes advancing years or other preoccupations are the cause. It is a pity when a man cuts himself altogether adrift from the practice of Freemasonry at this stage of his career, but something may usually be found to have been salvaged. The observance may be infrequent, but the man who can call himself Worshipful Brother has usually acquired standards of responsibility and of fair dealing beyond those to which he might otherwise have attained, and it is most unlikely that these will ever leave him.

ADDRESS TO ASHLEY R.A. CHAPTER, RANGIORA

I suppose all of us, at some time or other, have experienced that peculiar phenomenon of "arrested attention" which makes a particular phrase stand out, perhaps above its merit, so that the mind, for the time being at least, fails to grasp the surrounding context. All else is blurred and indistinct, like the rest of an abstract painting round one small but sharply defined and recognisable feature. Fortunately for us, the full meaning of a ritual passage is usually restored in a subsequent hearing; but sometimes the mental picture induced by the phrase remains so vividly in the mind that it can only be exorcised by analysis and study—a process that in itself may be rewarding.

One such phrase for me is in the lecture of the Excellent Degree, where it is explained that the colours of the veils typically represent the elements, the second veil being "purple of the sea as tinged by the blood of murex". When I first heard this I knew nothing of murex, but the poetic imagery of the phrase arrested my attention to the partial loss of its context, as I have described. Even later, when I found that murex was a species of shellfish, I still found it puzzling and almost paradoxical. When one considers the immensity of the sea, even of an enclosed part of it like the Eastern Mediterranean, in comparison with the little murex, the imagination boggles at the thought of the countless millions of murex needed to tinge that sea a purple colour. Yet, and this is part of the paradox, though cool reason seemed to prove it impossible, the picture remained and I felt obliged to find out what- I could about this little shellfish that tinged the sea purple.

The murex, or rock-shells, form a small, branch of the great family of gastropods, the most numerous of all kinds of molluscs, including snails, whelks and periwinkles. Like most gastropods, the murex shell is in one piece, spirally wound, and is asymmetrical, i.e., the opposite sides of the body are not similar. These lop-sided shellfish are usually more or less spirally ribbed, the ribs in some being prolonged into long spines or frills. Many gastropods have eyes at the tips of the tentacles, but in murex they are midway along them. They are carnivorous, killing and eating their prey (usually other shellfish) by boring through the shell with their rasp-like tongues. Some murex species are said to be among the most beautiful of all gastropods, but the two Mediterranean species we are now concerned with (M. brandaris and M. trunculus) "have no special beauty to attract the eye, yet they have a history full of interest". Both have rather irregular, craggy spiral shells, the larger, brandaris, having long spines on its ribs. It may grow to a maximum length of 4 in., while trunculus, up to 3 1/4 in. long, has brown bands and very short spines. Both, in ancient times, were very plentiful in the sea near Tyre where they were gathered to provide the famed Tyrian Purple with which the robes of Roman Emperors were dyed.

Incidentally, a dye can also be extracted from the native British dog whelk, and some authorities state that a close relative of the dog whelk (purpura haemostoma) was used in conjunction with the two murex for the imperial purple, while others do not mention it. From murex a dark blue colour was obtained, and from purpura a tint approaching scarlet. Of course, any artist knows that purple can be made by mixing blue and red, but I like to think that the use of the pigments from murex and purpura is a literal confirmation of the ritual wording that purple is the union of blue and scarlet.

As each mollusc yielded but a drop or two of colouring matter, the process of pounding the shells and preparing the dye was long and tedious, and this was the cause of the extravagant price of the Tyrian purple wool and cloth. It is of incidental interest to note that the dye came from the shell and not the blood, so that our ritual phrase is a figure of speech rather than scientific fact.

The ancient Phoenician city of Tyre was of course the city-state of King Hiram, the friend and ally of King Solomon; and the home also of that other Hiram whom we call Hiram Abif, who was the son of the widow of Naphthali, described in my Bible dictionary as an "architect-artisan-artist and worker in bronze, who was skilful in dyeing and weaving the purple material Solomon desired for the veil of his Temple". Truly a man of many parts.

Built first upon the mainland, halfway between Beirut and Tel Aviv and later for safety's sake extended to two small islands a quarter-mile off shore, ancient Tyre was for a long period one of the busiest and most prosperous seaports in the Near East, and the riches brought to it by the far-famed purple are mentioned by Strabo, the Greek historian, centuries later. The secret of the famous dye has long been lost, and was probably already lost when Strabo wrote, about the beginning of the Christian era. Tyre no longer exports the blue and purple wares referred to in Ezekiel, though in quite recent times the rock-hewn crushing basin filled with the breccia of broken murex shells could still be traced upon the Tyrian shores.

For 700 and more years from the time of Solomon and Hiram, Tyre enjoyed its pre-eminence as a trading port and "the island of the Princes of the Sun". Its success was Red was obtained from the ground dried roots of various species of madder native to the Levant. These dyes were in ancient times and for centuries later marketed in powder form, but are today almost entirely replaced by synthetics.

The hangings of the Temple were of finest twined linen, as are actually or symbolically those of our chapters. Linen is, of course, made from flax, the oldest known textile fibre. Flax (linum) has been grown in the Nile valley from ancient times and Egypt is credited with producing the finest linen, but the hot, low areas of Palestine, such as the Jordan Plain near Jericho where Rahab dried flax "in order" on her roof top, grew it under conditions similar to those in Egypt, and the Hebrews developed great skill at the linen looms, even exporting linen to Egypt for loin cloths. The flax stalks were pulled, separated from the seed capsules, bundled, retted, exposed to the sun and covered with water for 10 days to bleach and soften. A wooden mallet was used to separate the fibres from the woody part, and they were then drawn into thread with a comb. This process has remained virtually unchanged for thousands of years and even in machine-made linen today the principle is the same. Excavations have unearthed parts of looms that were used about 4000 B.C. Linen was durable enough for the sails of Tyrian ships, soft enough for bedding and fine enough for priestly vestments. It was used for embalming the Egyptian dead, and we all know that when Peter looked into the empty tomb on Easter morning he saw the linen clothes lying. The white veil, we are told, is, from its colour, emblematic of purity and innocence, but there seems to be a connection between linen itself and the virtue of purity for mixtures of wool and linen were forbidden for priestly vestments. (Lev.)

Amicable relations between Tyre and Israel did not long outlive Solomon and Hiram. After the division of Solomon's empire between his son Rehoboam as King of Judah and Jeroboam as King of Israel there was frequent friction between Tyre and the latter, and this continued for hundreds of years. From Amos (about 140 years after Solomon) onwards, most of the prophets united in denouncing Tyre for its materialism and profligacy, Joel, some 400 years later still including in his censure its trade in Jewish slaves with the Grecians. About 200 years after Solomon, Isaiah foretold the miserable overthrow of what was formerly a "joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days . . . the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth", and Ezekiel, who described its former wealth and fascination in colours as vivid as its own brilliant dyes, lamented its former glory and prophesied its irrecoverable fall when all of Tyre "shall fall into the midst of the seas in the day of thy ruin". Thus it was, but Tyre, as a town of some importance, did linger on into the Christian era, fell to the Arabs in 623 A.D., was captured and made for a time a stronghold by the Crusaders, only to fall again to the Arabs in 1291.

But I must leave this digression into political history, with its moral of the corrupting effects of too great wealth, and return to natural history in which my study of murex led me. In Tyre, as in other parts of the ancient world, dyes were obtained from other sources than shellfish. Of the two other colours we are most concerned with, blue dye was made from the plant Indigofera tinctoria. It is a fairly common shrub in Eastern lands, a legume with leaves, flowers and pods very like the common vetch, and the dye was obtained by steeping and crushing freshly cut plants in water and precipitating and drying the extract founded upon its sea-going ships and sailors, its sure commercial acumen, and the manufacture of a few highly-prized products—dyes, glassware and metalwork. It established trading colonies in Sicily, Sardinia, Spain and Africa (including Carthage, later to be the great rival of Rome), and even sent fleets to trade as far as India and Britain.

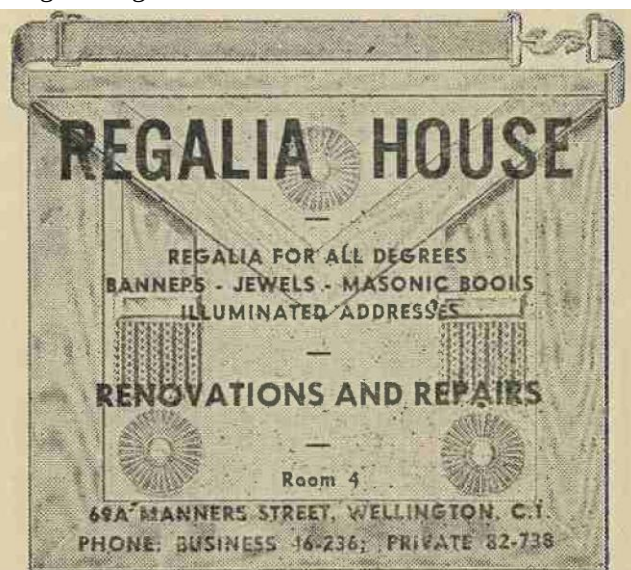

Never a strong military state, it yet resisted many sieges by invading nations, including the Assyrians under Sargon and later under his son Sennacherib, and one of 12 years by the Babylonians under Nebuchadnezzar. When its hinterland fell to the conquerors, Tyre with its shrewd business sense, negotiated terms with them, yielding sovereignty but retaining its trading privileges. Eventually it fell to the superior generalship and engineering skill of Alexander the Great in 332 B.C.

and thereafter, though it was a long time dying, never regained its former glory. Alexander, building a mole from mainland to island, took the fortress by direct assault. The mole accelerated the accumulation of drifting sands, the port gradually silted up, and the glory of Tyre was no more.

Freemasons In The Space Age

How many times over recent years have we heard the now well known sequence from Cape Kennedy Space Centre?

Power sequence transfer complete. All systems go. Guidance is internal. Twelve, 11, 10, 9. Ignition sequence starts. Six, 5, 4, 3, 2, 1, zero. All engines running. Lift off. We have a lift off. Tower cleared, Pitch and roll at proper heading. We are down range.

Later travelling at 25,000 m.p.h. to hurl out of earth orbit and maybe toward another voyage to the moon.

A little over 11 years ago the National Aeronautic and Space Administration, known to the world as N.A.S.A., at the 1,000-acre Manned Space Centre in Houston, Texas, chose seven astronauts for operation Gemini. This was to provide scientists and engineers with information required to land man on the moon, so space and the planets surrounding us could no longer be ignored.

The goal became a reality when Apollo XI on 20 July 1969 landed two men, including a Freemason, on the face of this pock-marked lunar surface. Man had broken his bonds and had landed on another world nearly a quarter of a million miles from his mother earth and loved ones. Never before had man travelled so far, so fast. Never before had so many millions listened and watched, their imaginations stretched as they spoke across the emptiness of space.

Ten men among the men who had travelled in space have Masonic backgrounds, of some of these men, a pen portrait in miniature. The men we associate with being responsible for these feats. The men who required skill, courage and endurance.

The first astronaut to be acknowledged is Brother Gordon Cooper, who was the second man to make an orbital flight. He was awarded the N.A.S.A. Exceptional Service Medal. He joined Lodge Carbondale, No. 82, in his home state of Colorado, when he went to Texas he joined the Clear Lake Lodge, No. 1270, as well as Indian River Chapter, No. 27 and also the Chapter at the Air Force base at Patrick in Florida.

Of his 22-orbit mission he carried two tow flags—one of these flags was presented to his mother lodge and the other was exhibited during the New York World's Fair.

The late Brother Virgil Grisson, known to his friends as "Gus", unfortunately lost his life with two other astronauts during a simulated count-down at Cape Kennedy during January 1967. He was one of the "original seven" and commander of a three-orbit mission of March 1965. He was known for his wit, but possessed great courage and ability. He was a member of Mitchell Lodge, No. 228, in Indiana. Cape Canaveral Chapter, No. 366, and a member of Knights Templar.

Brother Donn Eisle was selected as an astronaut in October 1963. He joined a lodge in his home town of Columbus, Ohio, No. 732, Luther B. Turner. When he went to Texas he joined the Cape Canaveral Chapter, No. 366. I believe he has been chosen to be crew member with Commander Alan Shepherd of Apollo XIV during 1971.

Made a Master Mason on sight by the Grand Master of Florida Bro. Walter Schirra occupied the command pilot seat of the history making Gemini VI which made a space rendezvous with Gemini VII. He is a member of the Canaveral Lodge, No. 339, and a member of the same Chapter as the late Bro. Grisson. He carried several Masonic items with him on his later Apollo VII flight, among them were two 12 x 15 in. flags, one of these was presented to the Scottish Rite Museum in Washington.

The Freemason who paved the way for future moon flights, Brother Thomas Stafford, the Commander of Apollo X which orbited the moon during May 1969, was also crew member with Bro. Schirra in the Gemini VI flight. He is a member of the Western Star Lodge, No. 138, in his home town of Weatherford in the State of Oklahoma and commander of Apollo XIII that nearly met disaster.

Last, but certainly not the least important is Brother Edwin Aldrin the man who, with two others left Cape Kennedy Pad 39A in the giant 363 test Saturn 5 on the 197-hour journey to the moon and back, the man who helped to guide Neil Armstrong over the boulder-filled craters to a gentle sitdown in the dust of the Sea of Tranquility. The $24 billion project had worked for these men of courage. He has been a Freemason for some years, and as late as October 1969 was awarded the Knight Templar Cross of Honour. Some say that he left some items of Masonic character on the moon.

This was the bold onset of a programme of Space Flight that will extend through to the many generations of man. Many men, and no doubt Freemasons, will follow the trail that these and other astronauts have blazed. We are looking forward to the days when we will be manning great space stations in earth orbit, exploring the surface of the moon, and in the more distant future, blazing new trails out to the mysterious solar system.

Stained Glass Was Product of Gothic Architecture

In these days of speed, when what we have clocked up on the day's run seems to matter more than what we have seen, do we ever consider what we may have missed. To the tourist, be he the day tourist or the tourist from overseas, the cathedrals and churches of England are more often than not included in the list of things to be seen. It is not until one reads the following extracts of a long article which some time ago appeared in The Victorian Craftsman under the name of Bro. Oliver Hoyem—that it is realised what can be missed when visiting a cathedral. The history of stained glass must be a fascinating one; an art, however, much too slow and exacting for the majority in this age of getting nowhere at high speed.

A rainbow can make one breathless with emotion. A rose window has made men incoherent with enthusiasm. Colour, the essence of both, is the joyous gift of God to his children, the stained-glass windows of the soul; a cathedral without stained glass would be depressing as a world without colour.

The making of stained-glass windows belongs wholly to the Christian era. The art was particularly identified with the Middle Ages and it practically began with Gothic architecture. The demand for gorgeous windows was, in fact, one reason for the development of Gothic architecture. To get away from the narrow lancet windows necessitated by the massive walls of the Romanesque style the operative masons transferred the thrust of the stone vaulting to buttresses outside the walls. Thus relieved the walls could be opened up for large windows through which a flood of light bathed the interior in a radiant glow.

So wholeheartedly did the cathedral builders grasp their opportunity of fitting these window spaces with jewelled creations that men have never been able to surpass them in beauty. Some contend that parts of the art have been lost for ever. So perfectly were the windows wrought that they have withstood the tests of time, the fury of the Puritan, and the sinister energies of 19th century restorers.

Stained-glass windows are designed by churches of practically every communion. Nobody contends that they savour of popery, although that is the common objection to wall paintings in churches. Masonic lodges in the United States have adopted stained-glass windows to increase the beauty of their lodge rooms, but one must go to the cathedral for the true setting. Stained-glass windows were indeed a divine inspiration of the masons and builders of the Middle Ages.

Before the Gothic Era

What drear places, how lacking in joyousness, were the interiors of the temples erected to God before the Gothic era. Many ancient people worshipped outside the temples in courtyards. Colonnaded areas were reserved for the assemblies. Only the elect entered the sanctum sanctorum. Man's natural love of colour led him to lavish pigmentation upon the stone exteriors. The gilt on Solomon's Temple is said to have reflected the sunlight in a glorious flash of colour. The beauty of the Parthenon lay in its exterior. The interiors of the temples, usually more cells for the storage of some shrine or figure, were secondary to the exterior in expressive beauty. Not so with the Gothic.

READ THE CRAFTSMAN

Before the Gothic era, windows had not developed much beyond the smoke-holes of the first mud huts. In practically all the ancient temples the light for the interior came only from the doorways. The Egyptian, the Assyrian, the Indian, and the Chinese architectures were alike in this respect. Some provided other openings for light and air. The classic Greek and Roman temples were generally without windows. Lincoln's Memorial in Washington illustrates the classic method of lighting the interior.

Ecclesiastical Jewel

Glass was used in windows in the Byzantine and Romanesque churches, but the possibilities of stained glass were not realised until the Middle Ages when Gothic provided an appropriate setting for this ecclesiastical jewel. Then the northern countries made it a feature of their cathedrals; the glaring sunlight of Italy and other countries made it advisable to dim the interior light. Thin slabs of white alabaster were often preferred to the brilliant glass.

Stained-glass windows must serve a variety of purposes. First, they must provide lighting for the interior. Then the colours must be so blended that a fitting emotional reaction is produced. Finally, they must tell a story of religion in a religious as well as in an artistic manner. In all their purposes they must be subordinated to the architecture itself.

Middle Ages Secrets

Interior lighting in a Gothic cathedral is produced by a series of windows, the largest of which are the rose windows, the clerestory windows, the apse windows, and the outer aisle windows. "Let there be light" was the cry of the operative masons who created Gothic architecture.

The blending colours seem to be as much a matter of intuition as of scientific knowledge. Years of experience taught the workers of the Middle Ages secrets that still evade modern glass-workers. However, certain fundamental principles have been recognised. For instance, a good window must have at least twenty-five per cent of blue glass. Blues, reds and violets must predominate in the higher windows. Yellows and greens can properly be stressed in the lower windows. Blues must predominate because of their greater radiating power. It is this luminous colour which gives value to all others. There may be one red, two yellows, two or three purples, and two or three greens, but there are infinite shades of blue, and these blues are placed with a very delicate observation of the effects they should produce on other tones, and other tones on them. Only when one grasps the vital importance of the blue in a stained-glass window can one appreciate the despair of modern glass-makers at reproducing the unfathomable vibrant blue in the background of 12th century windows. Tradition accounts for the failure to imitate it with the popular fancy that Abbot Suger of the Saint Denis School of Glassmakers ground down sapphires to obtain his magic colour.

Faith in Religion

In telling the story of Christianity, the glassmaker of the Middle Ages gave the windows a symbolic treatment in such, infinite detail that one can only marvel at the patience of the builders. Such work required faith in religion. A pagan touch would have manifested itself as distinctly then as it does today in much glasswork produced by workmen who obviously are not sympathetic towards the religious symbolisms and church-spirit which they are paid to transfer to glass.

In speaking of stained glass it is essential to know that there are two opposite ways of arriving at the same result. Glass-staining and glass-painting are two quite different things. One method is to build up a mosaic with pieces of coloured glass, each separate tint cut out of a separate piece of "pot-metal". The other method is to paint the design upon white or coloured glass. The two processes are usually grouped under one title because from the very early days the two were used together. The very first windows were in all probability mosaics of unpainted glass.

The schools of glassmaking of the 13th century were the schools of Saint Denis, Chartres and Paris. The Saint Denis craftsmen of Abbot Suger influenced the windows in Poitiers, Angers, Le Mans and Vendome, in France, and the Tree of Jesse window in York Minster, in England. Rouen was an active centre for glassmaking in the 14th century, making windows for Exeter and Gloucester Cathedrals, and Merton College, Oxford. Next to Troyes, Rouen contained the richest collection of coloured glass in France. Other schools of glass-making developed around other famous cathedrals. Many years were required to work out all the designs. Many rich patrons were required but many were found only too delighted to patronise such a beautiful form.

Toiled like a Jeweller

The artist of the Middle Ages toiled like a jeweller setting diamonds and rubies to increase the splendour of the coloured glass he used. His rose windows were a delirium of coloured light, a cluster of jewels. Close inspection reveals many crudities in design, but to change them would produce a less brilliant effect. The colourist sacrificed detail of drawing to colour. As long as he got harmony it mattered little whether a green camel or a pink lion looked like a dog or a monkey. The generally accepted ideal today, after centuries of experiment, is not a pretty picture made transparent but a window made beautiful.

Among the more famous rose windows of Europe are those of Notre Dame, Chartres and Lincoln. The rose windows are really Romanesque in origin, with this exception—the typically Gothic window is pointed. But in this case, as in a few others, the absolute architectural consistency which would have resulted from the pointed arch alone was sacrificed to retain the beauty of the rose.

The east window in Gloucester Cathedral is said to be the largest in the world.

The Editor,

The "Craftsman". Dear Sir,

Although it is unlikely that your journal would be read by many of those directly concerned with the subject of this communication, I feel that the matter is one that deserves attention by all who have the welfare of the Craft at heart and that something should be done by Lodges and particularly by Lodge Secretaries.

While using my machine to address envelopes for notices for four lodges, I have found that almost 40 percent of the addresses are those of members who now reside beyond the length of their cable tow.

Except perhaps at installations or when an old friend is being admitted or being installed the Lodges seldom see their long departed members. My own Lodge urges departing members to join a Lodge in their new locality and we notify the Lodge concerned of the arrival of our member, but it is a long time since we were notified of the arrival of a Mason in our area. Both of these practices should be more widely adopted for there is undoubtedly a vast number of unattached brethren and of Masons who seldom, if ever, return to attend their own Lodge. Some few have affiliated with Lodges in their new districts and retained membership of their former Lodge, but the great majority of those who move away from our district and continue to pay dues to us do not affiliate and their only connection with Masonry is that they are continuing to pay dues. Since we commenced to show "Suggested Voluntary Donation to Benevolent Fund, $4" as part of the total, most members have made this optional payment.

I am wondering if you, or some other capable writer, would prepare an appeal to these non-attending members to revive their interest in the Craft. Perhaps reprints of the article could be made available to Lodge secretaries for inclusion with the notices of distant members.

Perhaps some Lodges may be quite happy to continue to receive the dues of departed members whose only call on Lodge funds is the cost of Grand Lodge dues, notices and postage, but if the Lodge's by-laws prescribe a low Country Members' fee the amount of Grand Lodge dues, the levies for charitable purposes and the standing charges may make the country members a liability on the Lodge's funds. In such cases the country members' low rate should be abolished or only prevail in the case of dual membership. Lodges are now so numerous and so close together that only in rare cases is there justification for a country member's fee. Joining fees should be a very small sum and continued efforts should be made to restore the active interest of departed members.

Yours fraternally,
W. P. WYLDE.

What about urging those Lodges which have a Post Office box to show it in their advertisements so that notices can be addressed to the Secretary, so-and-so Lodge, P.O. Box , and thus save the cost of a new addressograph plate with each change of secretary.

—W.P.W.

Reverence for Life . . . does not allow the scholar to live for his science alone, even if he is very useful to the community in so doing. It does not permit the artist to exist only for his art, even if he gives inspiration to many by its means. It refuses to let the business man imagine that he fulfills all legitimate demands in the course of his business activities. It demands from all that they should sacrifice a portion of their own lives for others.
